

ERP TRAINING

Let us look at the best practices for delivering ERP training.

01

Tailor the training program to meet the learner's job-role:

You need to ensure the ERP training program provides only the information required by your people to enhance their individual performance.

Document training materials:

Through documenting learning materials, users of the ERP software can access the required information in a hassle-free manner.

02

03

Provide in-person support to the ERP system users:

In-person support to the ERP system users helps the employees retain their learning and enhance their performance.

Monitor the effectiveness of training:

Proper monitoring enables organizations identify the gaps in the knowledge and bridge them and deliver the intended message.

04

05

Get your people certified on the ERP system:

According to SAP, certification lowers the risk of project failure and increases adoption rates.

Solicit feedback from learners:

You need to ensure the ERP training program provides only the information required by your people to enhance their individual performance.

TRAINING

Training is important for improving the employee's performance, boosting morale and adding edge to their skills set, this is achievable by focusing on the employee's professional development.

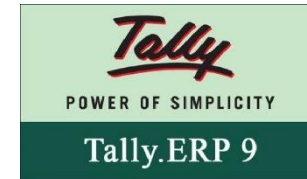

Many organizations are implementing different corporate training program to address specific needs to promote new working practices and standards. However due to increase in demand for ERP applications to simplify human work and eliminate human errors, it is faced by the issue of less technically skilled workforce to achieve the same.

We believe the ability to attract, identify, develop and retain key talent is essential to meet your company's current and future leadership needs.

At Tek Malia we assess the employee's technical know-how on the desired technology or the technology the company wishes to purchase and implement, based on which we develop a program that is tailor made keeping your convenience as our priority.
